For completeness, AE2 also has a manual, rotational energy system using the Wooden Crank. This can't be automated, and is used to power the Quartz Grindstone (early-game 1.9x ore processing, and guaranteeing you always can make certain AE2 crafting components even if you somehow don't have a much better grinder added by another mod), and the Charger.

There are loads of systems which are probably simpler to build and certainly systems which generate far more power. I mean I am only on a 16LP pushing 3 commercial steam engines. But it has been really fun building it up from scratch and challenging to solve all the logistics problems it presents.

Just getting to sort of a mid-game level in this pack and I'm wondering what people are doing for decent power. I've been running off a few water wheels from immersive to keep my AE2 system going and a few thermal gens patched in to a battery for my machines. ... Hello, I have a problem with power distribution. We have built our energy supply mainly through the modpack FTB Industrial Contraptions and thus use the energy unit Zaps. With this we can also operate machines that actually need RF. Now I wanted to build a water wheel and feed this power into our power system.

I used 6x magma dynos until i could get a 5x5 reactor from extreme reactors (also used CC to control it for efficiency) After that Environmental tech has solar panels that are super OP so id suggest going into that, use flux plugs and flux points for power transfer and make a controller to enable wireless charging that works everywhere, crossdimension and millions of blocks away ...

rather than thinking of amperage being sent out, it's easier to think of amperage being drawn in by machines working. If you have 3 batteries in a buffer hooked up to a 4x4 cable and four machines that are working at once, each machine draws one amp, the cable can accommodate 4 amps so it won't melt but your machines can't recieve enough power to continually work (each battery ...
