How much space should be between lockers?

There should be a clear space of at least 1800 mm between rows of lockers facing each other and at least 900 mm between lockers and a seat or wall. Workplaces located away from buildings or other fixed accommodation should provide portable private facilities containing secure storage and seating.

How many lockers do I Need?

First, you need to figure out how many lockers you actually need based on occupancy. It's always best to have extra lockers rather than having a few occupants that need to carry around their materials all day. But, you also need to factor in locker dimensions as well as what type of material you're going to use.

Should you use smaller lockers?

Using smaller lockers can allow you to maximize the number of lockers; however, it'll reduce total locker space. While size and dimensions are huge factors when deciding on your lockers, you also need to figure out the material that you're going to use.

How many lockers are left open?

The only doors left open with 10 lockers are 1, 4, and 9. One way to work the problem is to do this with more lockers and look for a pattern in the numbers of the lockers left open; a better way is to look for a REASON why there should be a pattern. What is it that makes one locker end up open and another end up closed?

How many lockers are numbered 1 - 1000?

Here is a question from 1996, which asked about two problems, the first of which is our subject: 1) There are 1000 lockers numbered 1 - 1000. Suppose you open all of the lockers, then close every other locker. Then, for every third locker, you close each opened locker and open each closed locker.

How do I choose the right locker area?

The important thing is to have big enough lockers to accommodate the students' or occupants' items, as well as having enough for each occupant. When you've picked out your designated locker area, you'll want to be sure of the exact measurements of where you plan on putting these storage compartments.
