When a gas giant planet is in close proximity with its parent star, it experiences sufficient heating and tidal forces that can cause its hydrogen and helium atmosphere to be stripped away, leaving behind a remnant rocky core. Then it resembles a massive terrestrial planet. This hypothetical class of planet is called "Chthonian" planets.

The most recent definition of a planet was adopted by the International Astronomical Union in 2006. It says a planet must do three things: It must orbit a star (in our cosmic neighborhood, the Sun). It must be big enough to have enough gravity to force it into a spherical shape.

These shapes are all shapes which can be drawn flat on a piece of paper, the full three dimensional shape of the planet is created by rotating them about a vertical line. Thus the first shape below is drawn as a circle, the spherical shape of the planet is created by rotating the circle about a vertical line through its center. The Sphere
